A PROFUSION OF FLAGS.

The Street Decorations a Peature of the Celebration.

A public celebration in Washington always serves to bring the flag and the national colors to the front. From every public and private building in the downtown district yesterday flags were flying from poles; they floated from windows and on the sides of buildings, and were strung across the streets on wires so that they lent and added brighter color to the clear and pleasant afternoon. Every Government building in the city was profusely decorated. Pennsylvania Avenue from the Treasury to the Capitol was lined on either side with countless flags and long streamers of red, white and blue bunting.

Anything that bore the colors of the national emblem seemed to please the public, and everything that had a tinge of the martial spirit was an object of attention. Street fakirs took prompt advantage of this sentiment and lined the sidewalks, offering for sale canes with red, white and blue stripes, medals and ladges with a bit of ribbon as souvenirs

The postoffice building made a great display. All over the Avenue front were draped large flags, the centres being caught up against the wall while the stripes ran across the building. These flags were hung in every available place, even on the big clock tower. All the other public buildings flew more than their usual number of flags.

The larger of the business buildings nearly all made special efforts to have a brilliant display, and were successful in their efforts. Nearly all of the hotels were festooned with long streamers of president and a ways of anglause rolled presented and saven under the marines and seamen marching along with an easy, swinging galt received a genuine ovation.

The Fifth United States Cavalry, Col. William A. Rafferty commanding, presented a splendid appearance. With the capes of their overcoats turned back, showing to the yellow lining, they nided rich coloring to the line. Applause greated the troopers from one end of the Avenue to the President and a ways of anglause rolled.

were festooned with long streamers of bunting or flying flags. Between the Eb-bit House and the new Willard's Hotel a huge flag was swung so high in the rir that the rope which suspended it could not be seen from the street below, and the mass of color appeared to be floating in mid-air. The Riggs building, in Fifteenth Street, opposite the Treasury was profusely decorated, while the Riggs Hotel, Metropolitan Bank, the Raleigh, and other hostelries in the Avenue displayed the national ensign.

The newspaper buildings showed a Governor Gregory of Rhode Island and building was constituted in the Times building was especially noticeable for the cimplicity and general harmony of its decorations, nothing but large American flags being used in the decorations.

and Good Order Maintained. While the police arrangements for the Centennial Celebration were of the most complete character, they but emphasized the numerical weakness of the department. Almost the entire force had to be drawn to the centre of the city to look after the throngs that crowded the entire line of march, and, as a result, the resident and outlying sections were practically deprived of police protection. Immediately following the 12 o'clock roll Governors of States and Territories Greeted by the President.

Initial Ceremonies of the Centennial Celebration at the Executive Man-sion - Addresses by Commissioner Virginia, J. H. Tyler; New York, Theodore

In the presence of a distinguished gathering of stat smen, jurists, soldiers, and citizens, the initial ceremonies in connection with the Centennial celebration were held yesterday morning at the White House. It was especially fitting that the first events upon the programme of the day's festivities should be held at the historic mansion which has been the the tresident and Caomet, a.s. t. k. h. r. home of every Chief Executive of the nation with the single exception of George Washington, for whom the Federal city was named. The scene in the famous East Room, where the principal functions of the morning were held, was one illustrative of the growth, development, and progress of the country, in fact, of its inherent strength and greatness.

There were assembled the Chief Magistrate, William McKinley, surrounded by his official family, the Cabinet Ministers, also the representatives inet Ministers, also the representatives of the judicial and legislative branches of the Government in the persons of members of the Supreme Court and of the Senate and House of Representatives, together with officers of the army and navy and a large concourse of prominent citizens. Be-sid s these thirty-one of the individual States and Territories were represented by their Governors and the members of their respective staffs. In speeches appro-priate to the occasion were told in brief some of the important accomplishments of the past century, and with particular reference to the city of Washington. Addresses were delivered by Col. Theodore A. Bingham, Commissioner Henry B. F. Macfarland, and Gov. Leslie M. Shaw, of Iowa,

A Spirit of Pride Manifested. While the proceedings were not marked with especial enthusiasm there was yet manifested the spirit of pride in the material improvements which everywhere and in all things distinguish the year 1900 from the year 1800, when the Capital of the nation was located upon the banks of the historic Potomac. Men congra-u-lated one another that it had been their good fortune to live to assemble on such an occasion.

The decorations of the White House were simple, but sufficient. Autumn foliage, palms, potted plants and conserva-tory flowers adorned the East Room and other portions of the house where the ceremonies were in progress. In the centre of the East Room was exhibited for the first time the model of the enlarged White House, as proposed by Col. Theo-dore A. Bingham. The design to a large dore A. Bingham. The design, to a large extent, follows the idea of the late Mra. Harrison in increasing the capacity of the Executive Mansion. Against the cast wall of the room upon a background of yellow draperics were hung the drawings of the design, and in the centre a large water color of the building as it would be when completed.

There were signs of activity at the mansion early in the merning preparatory for the exercises of the day. Chairman John Joy Edson arrived early, and, together with members of his committee, and Secretary Cortelyou and the White House staff completed the details. An extra guard of police, under command of Sergeant Goes, was stationed throughout the grounds, and at the several gates. Governors of States Entertained at the Corcoran Gallery of Art.

resident McKinley, Accompanied by Secretaries Hitchcock and Wilson, Attends - Harmonious Decorations and Inspiring Music - Concluding Ceremony of the Capital Centennial

The closing ceremony in commemoration of the removal of the seat of government to Washington was the reception in honor of the Governors of States and Territories at the Corcoran Gallery of Art last night. The reception had certain brilliant features. The decorations were harmonious and the music exhilarating. The attendance was not so great as was expected, in view of the number of invitations issued, but there was a crowd of comfortable size. The President attended.

The fluted columns of white marble were entwined with laurel and smilax, the color scheme being green and white. The central stairway was banked on either side with laurel and palms, touches of light being introduced at intervals by clusters of bright chrysanthemums. The white of the walls about the stairway was softened with laurel pendant from the ceiling. At the head of the main staircase the statue "Augustus Caesar" stood embedded in a niche of green, tall palms drooping above the image.

A section of the Marine Band conducted by Lieutenant Santelmann was stationed at the south end of the south court and before "Winged Victory." The scarlet costs of the living musicians contrasted sharply with the pallor of "Apoxomenos." "Discobolos," "Meleager," and the "Dying Gaul," which were ranked about the band. Garlands of green rested upon "Aristides,"
"Antinous of the Capital," and "Hermes

"Antinous of the Capital," and "Hermes of the Belvedere."

Members of the Reception Committee began to arrive at 7 o'clock, and at 8 there was a steady incoming current of guests. These wandered at liberty through the gallery, chatting to animate friends about the mute figures looking down from many pedestals. At 9 o'clock there night have been heard expressions of slight impatience at the failure of the Presidential party to arrive. The band was playing Santelmann's march, "The National Capital Centennial," and "The Voice of Our Nation," "America," "The Sunny South," and Sousa's latest, "Hall to the Spirit of Liberty."

A 9:30 o'clock a murmur ran through the gallery that the carriages of the President alparty had arrived at the New York Avenue entrance, and the guests pressed forward to a point which the President McKinley, escorted by Charles J. Bell, Chairman of the Reception Committee, and followed by Secretary Hitchcock, Secretary Wilson, and Mr. Cortelyou, entered. Committeemen forced an aisle through the crowd and the President and those accompanying him went to a room where they laid aside their land records of the District of Columbia, in Liber 1960, folio fas et seq., we will sell at defaulting purchaser's cost and risk.

The heavy caken doors were swung back, a chill draft swept into the marble hall, four flourishes were sounded by the band and President McKinley, escorted by Charles J. Bell, Chairman of the Reception Committee, and followed by Secretary Hitchcock, Secretary Wilson, and Mr. Cortelyou, entered. Committeemen forced an aisle through the crowd and the President and those accompanying him w dent and these accompanying him went to a room where they laid aside their overcoats and hats. When they emerged, another aisle was forced, there were four more flourishes by the band, and the familiar strains of "Hail to the Chief" welled up. As the purty slowly climbed the white stairs, there was a gentle patter of applause. The distinguished guests pro-ceeded to seats on the second floor at the south end of the south court and above "Winged Victory." People erowded into the south court and gazed up at the President seated twenty feet above them. People on the second floor of the rallery and at the north end, gazed across the court at the President about fifty feet away. The President and Mr. Bell ap-peared to chat but no word audible to the mass of persons who looked on was spoken. There was no shaking of hands. The President and party retained the po-sition described for fifteen minutes and left the gallery as they had entered it. Among those present were:

HIS BOER FLAG MISSING.

Representative Sulzer May Ask the House to Investigate. The sailors who arranged the decorations at the Capitol draped several desks with flags. Among them was that of Representative Sulzer, on which was placed the flag of the South African Republic. Others had signal flags of the navy upon them. When the officers of the House saw them they were all removed.

When Mr. Sulzer reached the Capitol yesterday he found the following note upon his desk:

"We, the Blue Jackets of the United States take pleasure in wranging the

"We, the Blue Jackets of the United States, take pleasure in wrapping the Boer flag around your desk. Hoping you will continue to champion the cause of liberty and freedom for them, and for any other oppressed peoples in the world."

The note was signed by five members of the Sylph and Dolphin crews. Mr. Sulzer looked about his desk for the flag, but in vain. Mr. Sulzer threatened to demand an investigation by the House.
